TAKING CARE OF WORK-RELATED INJURIES

At Nura, we take a comprehensive approach to helping people get back to work in a timely manner after an injury.

Our team of pain specialists will diagnose the condition and develop a treatment plan that is tailored to meet the demands of the job. This may involve providing medical procedures, rehabilitation services, and other forms of care to help the worker regain their strength and well-being.

When it comes to work-related injuries, Nura can help. Our individualized plans of care are all coordinated to address each unique situation and are all provided under one roof.

PARTNERING ON A PLAN

Nura works closely with qualified rehabilitation consultants (QRCs) and occupational health professionals to ensure that all key stakeholders, including insurance companies, employers, and attorneys, are on the same page when it comes to supporting the individual's safe and successful transition back to work.

After each appointment, our team will communicate treatment plan updates and review available return-to-work options. When necessary, we will make a referral to an outside specialist as well as recommend interventional therapies that promote physical recovery and rehabilitation.
